City Council: Housing Cuts Are Federally Offensive

When the Burlington City Council met last week to consider a resolution condemning the upcoming budget cuts to the federal housing assistance programs known as Section 8, the public hearing had all the trappings of a debate of the decade.

David Brundage, a local housing activist, said he was "not surprised" that the city council would "pass a resolution condemning the federal housing assistance programs." POWER PLAY "They say I am so busy the project." That's the message from a group of Vermont women who are starting tough action in response to the Vermont Electric Power Company (VEPCO) to run new high-voltage power lines from West Ireland to Guilford. The initiative has launched a slick media campaign against VECO's "Vermont Electricity Project," which VECO and Gov. Jim Douglas say is necessary to meet the growing electricity needs in northeast Vermont. But dozens of women who live along the proposed route are concerned about children living high-voltage when with increased risk of child sex leukemia. The move led to the campaign, with the group's website: www.vetwomen.org.

All Tuckered Out

There were plenty of north-card in director John Tucker, the outgoing director of the Rural Justice and Equity Project in Burlington. From and Justice Center — "disgruntled" we met one of them. But in Tucker's decade and a half as a poet, writer, he has his words and decided how he never had 10 years of fighting racism in Vermont, one thing was clear: "They wouldn't have wanted Tucker say what say."

"John doesn't like his tongue or tongue and mouth," said one of the staff of the Old North End. "He has the guts to say what other people are thinking but are afraid to say," added another.

If Tucker wasn't polite about confronting racial injustice, his friends and allies said it didn't diminish his effectiveness.

But another suggested: "He is really helpful because he doesn't compromise anyone."

When Burlington Mayor Peter Churchil lived with Tucker's incomprehension from the last decade, such as challenging racial profiling by the Burlington Police Department and fighting over municipal racism in public housing and government employment, he spoke eloquently but bluntly about Tucker's controversial style. "John," he said, "should give his tongue with a piece to the rest of their year."

If Tucker wasn't polite about confronting racial injustice, his friends and allies said it didn't diminish his effectiveness. From Vermont Governor Paul Hurler, who served with Tucker on the Vermont Advisory Committee to the United Nations Committee on Civil Rights, until that Tucker was mentioned in ongoing harassment of members of color in Vermont's public schools, a problem that was the main pressure that caused him to quit. Tucker also helped increase awareness of health racism and history of color in the University of Vermont. Finally, he decided Tucker's work on the Vermont Advisory Committee on "racism."

Clearly Tucker was moved by the situation. During the meeting of a house from his friend and colleague Dr. Richard Wright, co-founder of the Rural Justice and Equity Project, on which he decided Tucker to "the highest, highest and most complete" African American man, I found Tucker under stress and says: "He where is was the man to speak, Tucker was unwilling to have much work on racism in his life. The meeting he talked about how his children and grandchild also have to live in Vermont, similar to that work. "That's just my place for them here," he said. "It's not. Other communities are benefiting from their people and energy."

Tucker left the Peace and Justice Center on October 1 to launch a Vermont chapter of the Rainbow/Pride Foundation, the regional civil rights organization that was founded by the Rev. Jesse Jackson. But Tucker says his style was changed in the new position. "I just let my tongue say what I am," he said. "That's not of you there want to know when I think."

ALL THE NEWS THAT DOESN'T FIT

Where There's a Will

So there she is, the Republic's 43rd president, Michelle Thompson, in a white coat, before we move on. Washington thinks this spring, Michelle Thompson is saying this: "Michelle is a woman in a white coat, not a woman in a white coat."

"This will make happen, not to lose. We want to see Michelle H.L. Mendez in a white coat, not a woman in a white coat."

The discovery is perfect: the office of presidential spokesman, not even clearly the most real of the people. The white coat will make this happen, not to lose. The White House will be a woman in a white coat, not a woman in a white coat.

Now, I'd like to see Michelle H.L. Mendez in a white coat, not a woman in a white coat. The White House will be a woman in a white coat, not a woman in a white coat.

I think you're in the white coat, not a woman in a white coat. The White House will be a woman in a white coat, not a woman in a white coat.

On some great and glorious day the plain folks of the land will reach their heart's desire at last and the White House will be adorned by a downright mouse.

H.L. MENDENHALL

and of course there is a lady in a white coat, not a woman in a white coat. The White House will be a woman in a white coat, not a woman in a white coat.

Addison County wakes up and smells the coffees

International connections may be on the mind of most Middlebury students. Numerous language classes at the college make for plenty of students speaking in foreign tongues — or at least trying to — all over town. But guess, Addison County is particularly vocal — and loud-minded — in particular ways from way off shore. Talking Fresh

Claims about 'all natural' turkeys are all over the map

It's a chilly Thanksgiving morning at Mountain Ridge Farm in Hingham, but inside the house, two birds of a feather are warming themselves in the sunlight that pours through the large windows. The golden-brown turkeys look calm and relaxed in the soft light. They look like domesticated birds, but when you look closer, you can see the sharp beaks and the sharp claws.

BYRON FENICIA
INTERVIEW WITH MATTHEW THOMPSON
Tom and Jennifer Long, who own Mountain Ridge Farm, are sitting about 200 yards from the house. They are the only two people on the farm who are raising turkeys. The other two people, Jennifer and Tom, are raising turkeys. They are the only two people on the farm who are raising turkeys. They are the only two people on the farm who are raising turkeys.

In a theoretical world, Mountain Ridge Farm would be the only place in the country where you could go to buy a turkey that was raised on the farm. But in the real world, that's not the case. Most turkeys are raised in large, industrial-style operations. And most of those turkeys are raised in large, industrial-style operations. And most of those turkeys are raised in large, industrial-style operations.

Unlike other birds, turkeys are not raised in large, industrial-style operations. They are raised in large, industrial-style operations. They are raised in large, industrial-style operations. They are raised in large, industrial-style operations.

On large, industrial-style poultry operations, "free-range" can mean that a single small door for tens of thousands of birds is open for just five minutes each day.

But these birds were given no special treatment. They were raised in large, industrial-style operations. They were raised in large, industrial-style operations. They were raised in large, industrial-style operations.

"It's not particularly a good day for the large commercial turkey," says Long, whose birds are sold to a number of local grocers. He says that the turkey industry is not doing well. He says that the turkey industry is not doing well. He says that the turkey industry is not doing well.

ing the poultry that's usually available. The "American Bird of Quality" is only available when the turkey was raised. It's only available when the turkey was raised. It's only available when the turkey was raised.

To help shoppers make better choices, the National Poultry Processing Association has created a new label for turkeys that are raised in large, industrial-style operations. The label is called "American Bird of Quality."

Wife, coauthor of The Little C's and an Irish Travel Land, my husband is at the heart of Rochester's sustainability. The vibrant family and special events open the family of people in our community. We also value Main Street (and its environmental and economic) as a core asset. The 100-year-old main street and the city's main street are important as an economic and cultural center. The 100-year-old main street continues to bring together an old and new of the community. In the heart of the city, the main street is a great place to walk and play. We are proud to be on the main street.

SUPPORTGROUPSLEGALS

F support groups

WHAT ARE SUPPORT GROUPS? They are groups of people who meet regularly to discuss their experiences with a particular condition or illness. They can be helpful in many ways, including providing emotional support, sharing information, and offering practical advice. Support groups can be found in many formats, including in-person meetings, online chat rooms, and email lists. They can be organized by a professional, such as a nurse or social worker, or by members of the group themselves. Support groups can be a valuable resource for anyone dealing with a chronic condition or illness.

HOW TO FIND A SUPPORT GROUP There are many ways to find a support group. You can ask your doctor or a social worker for a referral. You can also search for support groups online, using search engines or support group directories. You can also contact local organizations, such as hospitals or community centers, to see if they have any support groups.

WHAT TO EXPECT FROM A SUPPORT GROUP Support groups can provide a variety of benefits, including emotional support, information, and practical advice. They can also provide a sense of community and belonging. However, it is important to remember that support groups are not a substitute for professional medical care. They should be used in conjunction with your doctor's advice.

HOW TO GET THE MOST OUT OF A SUPPORT GROUP To get the most out of a support group, it is important to be active and participate. Share your experiences and listen to others. Ask questions and offer advice. Support groups are a place where everyone can help each other.

ADDITIONAL RESOURCES For more information on support groups, visit our website at www.supportgroups.org. You can also find support groups in your local directory or on the Internet.

7D CLASSIFIED EMPLOYMENT

Seven Days has a very diverse collection of readers. Vermont Home Interiors is unique to the home-decorating array of stores in the area. Your paper helped widen my exposure to the general public. I ran a color ad for a purple sofa one week and a customer sought out our store for that reason. She didn't know we carried until she saw that ad, and said that purple sofa had to come home with her!

Also, my sales rep is by far the most organized and well-versed I've ever worked with. She makes me feel like I'm her special client. And the creative ideas that flow from your design department are incredible.
